

Ethical challenges in participatory projects: case study discussions

- How do we work with conflict in groups?
- Are we ready to hear young people's views when they differ from our own?
- How do we know when a young person is ready to engage?

These are just some of the questions that we will be reflecting on during this series of online discussions.

During each session we will share a case example of an ethical challenge that has arisen in a participatory project. These sessions will provide a space for a limited number of network members to take part in these discussions and share and reflect on the challenges, responses and learning.

The first session will take place on the 28th June at 11am (UK time) and will focus on:

Power, ownership and control – when we give young people a platform how prepared are we to listen to what they have to say?

If you wish to join the session please make sure that you register to join the network and email elizabeth.ackerley@beds.ac.uk to reserve a place and receive further details.
